Labor Project, Project Description

The Labor Project

During the labor project, we studied about many things, some being the Industrial Revolution, the advancements of the job market, labor issues, and historian Adam Smith. Within the Industrial Revolution, we looked at labor issues women, children, and even men faced and continue to face to this day. We also learned about automation's possible takeover in the workforce and how this will affect the people working, as well as my generation of kids and their places in the workforce possible being closed off. As a class, we were tasked with researching and creating arguments for a structured academic controversy about whether or not globalization has undermined America's working class, as well as completing in-class timed written essays about the subject of the Industrial Revolution and the problems within it. For our final product, we made podcasts on a topic we were interested in that also continued to dive deeper into the idea of the problems we are facing in our everyday lives in the workforce.
