

Watercolor Project Reflection

Did you like working on this project?

This was one of the most challenging art projects for me because watercolor is a form of art I have never used before. It is definitely not my ideal form of painting, so this project was not as fun for me as others. It was intriguing to experience watercolor for the first time, but this project taught me that I would prefer to use other types of paint instead.

What was challenging?

One of the biggest challenges I faced was using a type of paint I have never used before. This caused me to start one painting and not liking it because of my lack of knowledge of how to use the specific material and so I had to redo my painting. In the end, I learned that not being able to understand something, like how to use watercolor, frustrated me to the max and so I was not very stocked about this project.

What did you like about using the material?

I did like having a new experience with a different form of art I've never used before. Knowing that I don't like watercolor is just as important for me as knowing what paints I do like to use. Also, having to try something I was unfamiliar with as well as scared of pushed me out of my comfort zone which always helps me in the end.
